

Dear Concert Promoter/Producer,

We promote an annual event called CrossRoads Catholic Music Festival. Our aim is pretty simple. First, to provide music for enjoyment and for worship in a totally Catholic context. Second, to evangelize and spread the Faith. In our first year we wondered who we would get to play. Catholic music was really just beginning to be recognized as a movement and evangelistic tool. Good bands seemed few and far between.

That was four years ago. Since then God has blessed what we believe was started in his Holy Spirit. Catholic music has grown enormously in both diversity and ability. Where once we went begging, now there is a Catholic music scene providing a full menu of good artists. There are so many choices it can almost be bewildering.

Which brings me to my purpose in writing. Last year while putting together the festival line-up I was looking for something new, a band which was young and energetic. Luckily I discovered a group outside Cincinnati named Last Day. They seemed to be exactly what we needed.

Long story short, Last Day came to the festival and ROCKED the place. They were spirited and energetic with an infectious groove. In fact, we liked them so much we gave them a second slot, kicking off the Saturday night lineup. I have heard nothing but raves on them from the festival-goers. But beyond that, even though they're young they were professional and easy to work with. And beyond even that, what really counts is that they are truly given to ministry and evangelizing. That's what they are truly all about.

If you are looking for energetic, worship driven rock that teens can relate to easily [and who isn't] then I strongly recommend Last Day for your event. They will deliver. Please feel free to call me with any questions about them. Or email me at larry@crossroadsfestival.com.
